DENSITY AND COMPRESSION - HOW WE MEASURE FOAM

Foam is measured using industry wide testing procedures in order to predetermine its qualities.

Density is calculated at the time of formulation. Qualux is 2.5 lbs. of density, Curon is 2.2 lbs. of material per cubic foot, while regular white poly foam ranges from 1.0 lbs. to 1.5 lbs. of density.

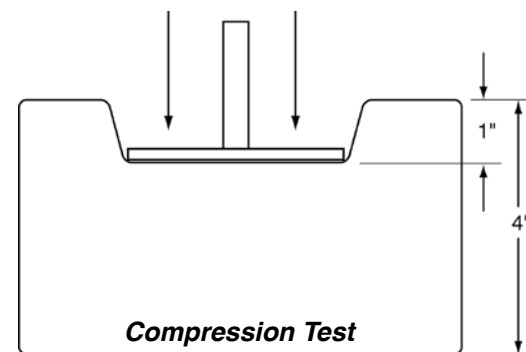

Compression is the measure of how much pressure it takes to push the foam down a specific amount. Specifically a round disk, as illustrated, with a surface area of 50 square inches is pushed down on a 4" sheet of foam.

The amount of pressure, measured in pounds, required to "compress" the foam down by 25% of itself - specifically the pounds of pressure required to push a 4" thick piece of foam to 3", is the measure of the foam's compression.

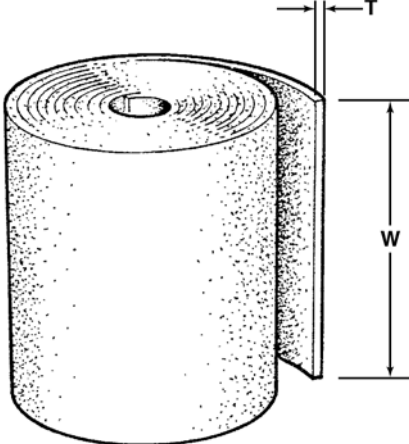

There is a range of allowable tolerance, usually +/- 5 pounds, but the number following the foam type, eg. Q41 indicates 41 pounds of compression - a very firm piece of foam.

When selecting foam first decide on the density (Qualux, Curon, etc.) and then the compression required (firm, medium or soft). There are many different types of foam. We have listed selected stock items only.

15 lb.bag Item No. 11175

A leading Toronto area designer, Lois Macauley would like to share a great tip! If you combine 50% Comforel and 50% natural feather/down combination, the mixture stands up better in the cushion. More comfort for your customer, longer lasting support for the cushion. It is important to knead the two fillers together, inside the casing, and then enjoy the results.
